Allegheny Offers Educational and Safety Information on Web Site

GREENSBURG, Pa., October 2, 2006 – It's that time of year again – classrooms across the region are filled with students writing papers, taking tests and learning about a variety of topics. Allegheny Power would like to remind its customers that a wealth of information about electricity is available on the Education & Safety page of our Web site.

The Education & Safety page is an online extension of Allegheny's Customer Service Center and is an excellent source for information about electricity. Customers can learn about ways to conserve energy, what to do if the lights go out, and how to stay safe around electricity. Customers can also download brochures regarding bill payment options, service requirements and other topics.

In addition, Allegheny invites customers and their families to join Louie the Lightning Bug in the Electric Universe, an informative Web site for students that provides important safety tips and interesting facts about electricity.

Allegheny Power is committed to providing quality customer service and keeping our customers informed. To access the information above, visit our Web site at www.alleghenypower.com and click on the Education & Safety link.
